Mr. Stevens at the South.

Thaddens Stevens, a man having stronger friends and more bitter enemies than any other in all the land, occasionally, because of his courage and honesty, wins a tribute like the following, which we take from the Galveston (Texas) Bulletin :

While we disagree with him and disapprove of nany of his projects, we cannot but admire his terrible carnestness. No man not thoroughly cor vinced of his own rectitude and of the innate wis-In my judgment, the salaries of all pub- dom of his acts, would, day by day, follow them out lic officers in the present financial condi- with such intense anxiety, while the clods of the tion of the country, should be reduced, and grave were crumbling beneath his feet. day he totters or is carried into the House, straining the brittle threads of life, for the purpose of accom-plishing a political act—an act from which he can gain no possible good, but which he professes to beits people. No man can read the daily reports of Congress and doubt the honesty of this old man, nor the pureness of his motives, however much he may doubt their wisdom. Right or wrong, still the sight of Thaddeus Stevens, battling for that which HOLSTON FACTORY ENVELOPES he thinks is right, with scarcely an hour's lease of

The American Bonapartes.

A rather significant step has lately been taken by the Emperor Napoleon in giving official, though indirect, recognition to the branch of the family known as the American Bonapartes. Jeromo Bo naparte Patterson, a grandson of Jerome and Miss Patterson, it will be remembered, was induced to leave the United States army four or five years ago, become a candidate for Congress, but owing and take up his residence in France, where he was condition of my private affairs, I declined. ter the marriage of Jerome and Miss Patterson was Whatever may be the wishes of the peo- annulled by the first Napoleon, the Bonaparte fample in the selection of a candidate, I shall ily steadily refused to recognize the son born of that union; and when the grandson received his first commission from the present Emperor, it was under the name of Bonaparte Patterson.
